The study of linguistic landscapes is an emerging field that analyzes the presence or absence of languages in public spaces. The linguistic landscapes of Madrid provide us with a privileged vantage point to observe the continuous transformation of the city and its inhabitants. A group of undergraduate students from the BA degree in Modern Languages, Culture and Communication at UAM have swept the streets photographing a kaleidoscopic register of the city. The exhibition reveals the way in which the inhabitants co-exist, the vitality or decline of the languages they speak and the way in which novel communication networks emerge. The photographs capture the beating pulse of the city, revealing the multiple voices of a multilingual Madrid that often go unnoticed. This is an intellectual adventure, open to anyone, in which the photographs suggest answers to the questions that the exhibition poses.
